Expert On Middle East Was Famous As Biblical Scholar

Dr. Abraham Shalom Ezekiel Yahuda, seventy-four, internationally known Biblical scholar, died of a heart attack while on vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Dr. Yahuda had recently returned to the United States after a year and a half in Europe and Africa where he lectured and conducted research. His home was in New Haven, Conn. His wife, Mrs. Ethel R. Yahuda, survives.

Born in Jerusalem, his favorite subject from early childhood was the Bible and, as a boy of ten, he translated the Book of Daniel from the Aramaic into Biblical Hebrew. At sixteen he published a book on the history of the Arabs before Mahomet. He was educated in Palestine and at the universities of Strasbourg and Heidelberg and taught Biblical and Arabic subjects in Berlin until 1915.

In that year, through a special royal decree, he was named professor of Hebrew literature at the University of Madrid, being the first Jew to hold a professorship at a public institution of learning in Spain since the fifteenth century, according to the New York Herald Tribune. He left the chair in 1922 to lecture and travel in his investigation of the Bible.

During World War I Dr Yahuda obtained the assistance of the Spanish government in relief of Jewish communities in the Middle East and of refugees of many countries. He came to the United States in 1940 and was honored at a reception given by Jewish, Protestant and Catholic clergymen at Temple Emanu-El, in New York.

A Westerner by education and career, who traced his family back to early Babylonian times, Dr. Yahuda made an extensive inquiry into parts of the Old Testament.

Woman Gave Long Life To Betterment

Mrs. Rebekah Kohut, leader in Jewish educational and cultural life and the widow of Rabbi Alexander Kohut of the Central Synagogue, in New York, died at her home, 1165 Park Avenue, after a long illness. Her age was 86.

Mrs. Kohut's life was devoted to the betterment of mankind, and she was often referred to as the "dean of Jewish communal workers." The late Mayor La Guardia, expressing the gratitude of the city of New York for the work she had done, said of her at her golden jubilee in social work, which was celebrated by an enthusiastic dinner throng at the Commodore Hotel on November 21, 1935: "She was one of the first to put science and intelligence into philanthropy."

Fannie Hurst was chairman of this dinner and Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor in the Roosevelt Administration, was one of the speakers. At this occasion $50,000 was raised by Mrs. Kohut's friends throughout the U. S., part of which was turned over by her to the National Council of Jewish Women, of which she was an honorary vice-president and a co-founder. To her the important development of years of effort toward social justice had been unemployment insurance, says the New York Times.

Mrs. Kohut was associated with the employment work of the Young Women's Hebrew Association from its organization in 1914. She was a member of Mayor Mitchel's Unemployment Committee in 1915 and organizer of the first United States Employment Clearance Service. In 1923, at Vienna, she was elected president of the World Congress of Jewish Women.

Schnabel Was One Of World's Greatest Pianists

Artur Schnabel, one of the world's greatest pianists, died at Axenstein, Switzerland, at the age of 69 in the Grand Hotel, where he was living. Mr. Schnabel, who arrived two months ago, had been ordered by his physicians to take a long rest because of a heart ailment. A week ago his condition became worse. The hotel management said uremia precipitated his unexpected death. The pianist's wife and his son, Karl, were at his bedside when he died. He had been scheduled to play at the music festival in near-by Lucerne.

When the Nazis took power in Germany, Mr. Schnabel, who had Jewish ancestry, left Berlin where he then lived and moved to a villa on Lake Como in Italy. There pupils went to him from all over the world to pay $5 for a lesson. Then, in 1936, Italy's expulsion order was issued against foreign Jews, and Mr. Schnabel this time moved to the United States and became naturalized.

Mr. Schnabel was one of the great performers of the classic German composers, Beethoven, Schumann and Brahms. He never deviated from his uncompromising adherence to the standards such a specialty demanded, refused consistently to give in to audience demand for more rhapsodic demonstrations of piano technique, for twenty years refused to make a phonograph record, and also resisted for a decade all persuasions to appear on the radio, says the New York Herald Tribune.

His first appearance in America was on Christmas, 1921, when a small audience found themselves obliged to sit through the then unusual musical program of two hours of straight Beethoven, when Mr. Schnabel presented one sonatas after another. Most of the audience was dismayed if not overwhelmed by this rigid fare, although a significant minority was enthusiastic.

Although Mr. Schnabel's managers went to work on the pianist in something of a panic, he refused to give in to their entreaties that he conform during the rest of his American tour to the current taste of his audiences, which were not used to quite such consistent profundity.

He did not return to America until 1930, when Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, invited him to participate in a Brahms festival. After appearing at that festival, he continued on his second American tour, and something had happened to his audiences, for they turned out in impressive numbers to hear the typical Schnabel concerts—long, serious musical works, no encores, nor any other concession to popular taste.

By 1935, when he played all of Beethoven's thirty-two piano sonatas in a series of seven two-hour concerts, Carnegie Hall was sold out well in advance of each appearance. Mr. Schnabel, in addition to his appearances at Carnegie Hall, also played in recitals sponsored by the New Friends of Music, a non-profit organization that chooses its programs and only afterward selects the artists to play them.

His appearances had been relatively infrequent during the last few years except at such recitals. His last appearance in New York was in a recital at Hunter College in January. A second recital at the college had been scheduled on April 15, this year, but was canceled because of the pianist's illness.

Mr. Schnabel was born at Lipnik, in Austria-Hungary. He became a pupil of Hans Schmitt when six and studied afterward with Leschetizky, famous Viennese trainer of piano virtuosos, until he was fifteen.

Mr. Schnabel was a composer as well as a pianist. His latest work, his third symphony, was to have been played by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra for the first time in March with the composer as the soloist.

His other compositions include a piano concerto, a piano quintet, three string quartets, a solo violin sonata, a piano sonata, a Dance Suite for piano, and other piano pieces. As a concert performer he insisted on the classic compositions, but as a composer his idiom is distinctly radical.

Francis D. Perkins, a music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, writing about one of Mr. Schnabel's string quartets in 1941, said it "proved sufficiently radical in idiom to induce some listeners to leave the hall."

"Yet," Mr. Perkins pointed out, "along with the composer's apparent use of a twelve-tone scale, and fairly uncompromising pungently dissonant harmonies and austere tonal hues, his basic ideas implied that he has not turned his back upon romanticism, even if romanticism would hardly seem to be a characteristic of the work at first hearing."

NOTICE

If we have received your order for a New Year greeting, to be published in our Rosh Hashonah issue of September 21, and if there are to be any changes in name or address, these changes must be received in our Montreal and Toronto offices as soon as possible. August 10 was the deadline for these changes if the order was received by us before July 31. If the order was received after July 31, changes can be accepted up to September 10.

Justice Was Founder And Conductor Of Orchestra

Leopold Prince, former New York City Municipal Court Justice and founder-conductor of the City Amateur Symphony Orchestra of New York, died at Hanover, N. H., in the Mary Hitchcock Memorial Hospital at the age of 71. He had suffered a cerebral hemorrhage at near-by Enfield, where he was spending his vacation. His home was at 65 Central Park West, New York.

Thousands of persons have enjoyed for many years the music of the City Amateur Symphony Orchestra, a 110-piece group that plays classical and lighter music. Its members have included physicians, lawyers, elevator operators and ten-cent store employes. The orchestra, which has given free concerts on the Mall in Central Park, was the result of the devotion and ability of Mr. Prince.

The "Judge" as he was known throughout New York City had been an amateur violinist from boyhood. He played first violin in the orchestra at City College in 1900, the year he was graduated. In 1927 he and his son, Daniel, also [illegible] playing together in their home. Soon another part-time violinist and then a 'cellist joined them.

By 1911, when the orchestra, then called the Symphonic Ensemble, gave its first major concert, it had seventy-five members. That concert was in Wadleigh High School, where the orchestra had rehearsed. Soon the group began the concert series in the summer at Central Park and in the winter at the American Museum of Natural History. On rare occasions when admission was charged for the concerts, the money went to charity.

Over the years Mr. Prince labored for the orchestra, wielding the baton, planning its programs and rehearsing its members. He also spent about $20,000 of his own money to keep the group going, says the New York Times.

Mayor La Guardia, who often attended its performances and was instrumental in having friends make annual contributions to its support, gave the orchestra its present name. Last April Mr. Prince received a "distinguished service medal" from the Music Lovers League for his contribution to the city's musical life.

Born in Germany, Mr. Prince came to America when a child and was graduated from New York University Law School. He practiced for a time before he was elected as a Democrat to the State Assembly in 1905. He was re-elected in 1907, and the same year he was named to the Municipal Court bench, remaining a justice by re-election until the end of 1937. Since then he had been an official referee of the court, doing much work in the Small Claims Part. As a justice, he was instrumental in bringing about an amendment to Municipal Court law that abolished seizure of tenants' furniture in dispossess cases.

Mr. Prince had been a member of the Grand Street Boys, the Steuben Society, the Progress, Fidelity, Kanawha, Pocasset and Wichita clubs and the Tammany Society. In 1946, when the Austrian Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America was formed, he was elected executive vice-president. He was also a member of the Free Sons of Israel.

Surviving, besides his son, are his widow, Mrs. Hedwig Prince; a brother, Felix; and two sisters, Mrs. Hulda Blum and Mrs. Bianca Berger.

Europe Is No Longer Main Center Of Jewish Life, Estimate Shows

More than 4,900,000 Jews have migrated from Europe in the last hundred years, according to estimates by the Institute of Jewish Affairs of the World Jewish Congress. Most of this emigration took place before 1939, the pre-1939 emigrants being estimated at 3,800,000. About 71 per cent of the Jews remaining in Europe on the eve of World War II died, 200,000 falling in battle and 5,800,000 by Hitlerite extermination.

In World War II only 170,000 Jews were able to escape from Europe. Between 1945 and 1950 530,000 emigrated, 140,000 to the United States and Canada; 40,000 to Latin America and Australia; and 350,000 to the Holy Land.

As a result, whereas 88 per cent of the world Jewish population lived in Europe in 1850, Europe had only 24.5 per cent of world Jewish population in 1950, the institute estimates. Of the 2,750,000 Jews living in Europe in 1950, most are in Soviet Russia, cut off from the rest of the Jewish people.

As a result, Europe no longer is the principal center of Jewish life and culture. Jacob Lestchinsky, noted statistician and economist, who prepared the estimates, concludes: "The share of European Jewry in the life of the Jewish people, and hence its share in shaping the destiny of world Jewry, has greatly declined."

The tendency among Jews to emigrate from Europe is a continuing one, not only among citizens of southern and eastern European countries, but among those of western Europe as well, the study discloses. Thus, 8,000 or more than one-fourth of the 30,000 Jews in Belgium have registered for emigration. Thousands of Jews living in the Netherlands and France also have applied for emigration, mainly to Israel but also to the United States, Canada and Australia. Jews are represented in considerable number in the British emigration to the dominions.

In Eastern Europe, 7,000 to 8,000 of the remaining 36,000 Polish Jews have registered for emigration. According to reports from Israel, emigration from Rumania to that country, which totaled 62,000 in 1950 and the first five months of 1951, will be intensified. While Czech Jews have not been permitted to leave in recent months, Mr. Lestchinsky said,

FRIGIDAIRE ELECTRIC RANGE
(with "Wonder Oven")

For those who want the finest, this superb triumph of cooking convenience offers everything for electric cooking at its best. Its striking beauty will harmonize with the most modern kitchen setting, or add a welcome, modern note to the older home.

New Frigidaire "Wonder Oven" that bakes and broils at the same time

The amazing new Frigidaire "Wonder Oven" will actually bake a cake and broil a steak—or bake and roast—at the same time in the same oven.

This "years ahead" development—the amazing "Wonder Oven" may be used as an extra large oven, or as two smaller ones . . . there are separate controls for each oven. When broiling in the upper oven, with the oven door ajar and baking in the lower oven at the same time a sliding baffle drops down completely closing off the lower oven for baking purposes.

Remember, this is a Canadian model made by FRIGIDAIRE in Canada.

"there are still many candidates for emigration."

The expected movement from eastern and central Europe follows a substantial emigration of Jews from those countries in the immediate post-war period, the statistician notes: 37,000 out of 40,000 survivors in Bulgaria, 7,000 out of 12,000 in Yugoslavia, and 165,000 out of 200,000 survivors in Poland.

"The exodus from Europe would assume even larger proportions if all European countries permitted emigration," Mr. Lestchinsky believes.

While persecution, flight, war and emigration were bringing about the great reduction between 1850 and 1939, the number of Jews in Europe more than doubled between 1850 and 1914 as a result of natural population increase. However, the surplus of births over deaths among Jews was higher proportionately than in the rest of the population.

Between 1850 and 1914 the number of Jews in Europe rose from 4,500,000 to 10,000,000. The total population rose from 255,000,000 to 470,000,000. The Jewish emigration ran parallel to a general movement of peoples from Europe, involving 60,000,000 persons.

Thereafter the parallel ended. In the 1914-39 period the total population increased from 470,000,000 to 530,000,000. The number of Jews declined from 10,000,000 to 9,500,000 from Jewish losses in World War I, a decline in the annual natural increase from 170,000 to 65,000 and the emigration of 1,100,000.

W.J.C. Leader To Attend World Meeting

Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, of New York, top-ranking official of the World Jewish Congress and its consultant at the United Nations, left to attend the global meeting of the full executive of the WJCongress in Geneva. The executive conference, which will be attended by over 30 delegates from every continent, will formulate the WJCongress attitude toward the German problem and make plans to safeguard the position of Jews in areas of tension in case of an emergency period.

Dr. Perlzweig, who is also director of the WJCongress international affairs department, pointed out that the Western Allied Foreign Ministers were planning to meet late in September to consider further concessions to the already virtually independent Bonn regime and warned, "The relinquishment of controls over Western Germany, whose government is riddled with ex-Nazis, jeopardizes the chances for the growth of a healthy democracy in Germany and creates a grave menace for the future stability and security of Europe."

Dr. Perlzweig, a Cambridge University graduate; former leader of Goel Tzedec Synagogue in Toronto, Ont., and of the Liberal Synagogue, in London, England; and one of the founders of the World Confederation of General Zionists, will confer with government leaders and WJCongress officials in London on U.N. and other problems. In Paris, he will discuss questions of human rights and statelessness and Jewish problems with French government and Jewish officials. He will take up the question of the Jewish position in North Africa, and particularly in Morocco, where nationalist agitation has created great tension. The conference will open in Geneva on September 10.

CANADIAN SPORTS PARADE

GOOD footballers and hockey players have made new and greater names for themselves in the field of government during their post-career. Similarly, good paddlers and scullers make good businessmen and the commercial world recognizes the fact. No doubt, the same drive and tenacity which won on the water, ice or playing field still sustains our athletes when the glamour days are done. A few months ago, in this column, we endeavoured to bring the records up to date on a few former athletes who are now prominent men in Canada's business. Here are other names you know.

The Ice Men

One of the outstanding centre men of the Boston Bruins was William Mailes Cowley. For years he travelled and played with Clapper, Shore, Weiland and the rest of those great Bruin teams. Bill Cowley still holds the NHL record for highest number of points, 594 (195 goals, 353 assists in regular season play, 12 goals, 34 assists in Stanley Cup playoffs). Today, at 39, Bill lives in Ottawa with his family (two girls and a boy) and is Manager of the Ottawa office, Lands and Forests Department, Provincial Government.

Reginald "Hooley" Smith went a long way after he starred with the Granites when they became Olympic Hockey Champions in 1924. The centre of the "Big S" line of Stewart, Smith and Siebert, Hooley in his greatest days was the guiding light of the old Marauding Maroons of Montreal. Today, Hooley Smith (48) lives and works in Montreal as President of the Smith Sanitary Supply Company. He has one daughter, Barbara, age 16.

If you have occasion to visit the Ottawa Railroad Terminal and pass the CNR traffic office, you may see a slight figure bending over a desk. A 270 goal man in the NHL, a member of Hockey's Hall of Fame, Aurel Joliat (50) is living and working in his home town. Everyday routine must be a far cry from the magic days with Canadiens when Cleghorn, Mantha, Morenz, Vezina and Joliat were in their prime.

The Water Boys

It's twenty three years since Joe Wright, Jr., made his second bid for the Diamond Sculls at Henley, England, and brought them home to Canada. Still active on the gridiron and in the water affairs of the Argonauts, Joe Wright (45) is a senior executive with the Weaver Fuel Company at Hamilton.

Denis Barclay, a prominent paddler in the 'thirties, out of St. Lambert, Quebec, remembers the "day of the big wind" (1930), at Hamilton Bay when the British Empire Games were under way. Many of the boats were swamped but Barclay and company won the Junior 4's. A winner of the Eastern Intermediate Singles at Lachine, Denis Barclay (38) has flown 30,000 miles in two years as Regional Public Relations Officer for T.C.A.

A long-time member of the Argonaut "eights" was Rod Denison (1931-37), the well known clothier. A stickler for precision and balance on the water, Denison (41) recalls an inquisitive step too many off the dock in the early spring. Chill Lake Ontario was no respecter of Argonauts.

Gridiron Greats

The names Frank Turville and Brian Timmins will bring back memories of the Terrible Tigers of the '30's. Turville, the long tooter of many a tensioned afternoon, is now an executive lawyer for the CPR. "Old Man of the Mountain" Timmins (52) is industrious as ever as Supervisor of Sales for Calvert Distillers.

One of the greatest Canadian football players of all time was Harry 'Red' Batstone of Queen's. Today Batstone (52) is resident doctor at the Ontario Hospital, Kingston, and practises his profession within a quarter mile of the scene of his greatest triumphs.

Time marches on!

into renewed prominence throughout the State of New York, when she had the courage to stand alone, out of sixteen members of the Joint Legislative Committee on Unemployment, and bring in a minority report. In contradistinction to the majority report, hers recommended immediate legislation that should provide for a compulsory system under which reserve funds should be built up by the industries of the state as a future insurance in behalf of the unemployed. Widespread gratification among women over Mrs. Kohut's action was evidenced when the Women's City Club passed a resolution congratulating her.

Born in Hungary on September 9, 1864, Mrs. Kohut was a daughter of a rabbi, the Rev. Albert S. Bettelheim, and the former Henrietta Weintraub. At her marriage in her middle twenties to the Rev. Alexander Kohut, a widower and the father of eight young children, Mrs. Kohut vowed to deny herself the joys of real motherhood. In her writings she always referred to her "children," never to her stepchildren, who were deeply devoted to her.

Following the death of her husband, a few years after their marriage, a considerable part of the Kohut estate was swept away. With the thought in her mind that she must make good to her children the money that was lost, she founded the Kohut School for Girls. It was a success financially and also served to satisfy her ambition for a real vocation. After the first World War, as chairman of the Re-employment Council of the United States Employment Service, she helped discharged soldiers find the jobs they wanted.

She wrote several books on American Jewish life. Her autobiography, "My Portion," published in 1925, was the record of a strenuous career. Last year she published a sequel, "More Yesterdays." Another of her books, "His Father's House," was published in 1925, and four years later she wrote another volume of reminiscences, "As I Know Them."

In 1917-18 Mrs. Kohut was industrial chairman for the National League for Women's Services. She was vice president of the Vocational Service for Juniors in 1919, and in 1931 Governor Roosevelt appointed her Advisory Counsel on Employment. The next year she became Advisory Commissioner for the New York State Employment Service, and from 1933 to 1938 served with the State on Unemployment. She was an executive director of Columbia Grammar School, treasurer and executive director of the Alexander Kohut Memorial Foundation and president of Emanuel Sisterhood.

Mrs. Kohut was honorary vice-president of the National Council of Jewish Women, a life member of the International Council of Jewish Woman, treasurer of the American Woman's Association, a member of the Women's National Republican Club, and Central Synagogue, and many other organizations.

Surviving are two sons, Eugene A. and Louis Kohut; four daughters, Mrs. Emanuel Millheiser, Mrs. Max Lowenthal, Mrs. Julius Kahn, and Mrs. Elsie Sulzberger, and a sister, Miss Cyd Bettelheim.

Students from 14 countries (including Israel) are arriving in Lancashire, England, to help with Britain's harvest this year. Among them are about 20 Israel students. The trip, organised by the National Union of Students in Great Britain, is made in cheap-rate planes.

TORONTO MARRIAGES

KERBEL-GREEN

The marriage of Joan, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Green, 29 Park Hill Road, to Dr. Norman Carl Kerbel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kerbel, 206 Rosemary Road, took place on June 6, at six o'clock, at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, with Rabbi Judah Washer officiating, assisted by Cantor Nathan T. Adler. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white Chantilly lace and nylon tulle, fashioned with deep square neckline, long sleeves, and basque waistline that flared over bouffant tulle skirts in a long tunic effect. A lace Juliet cap held her fingertip tulle illusion veil, and she carried a small white cascade of stephanotis and swainsonia, centred with a fuchsia-coloured and mauve orchid. The bridesmaids were Mrs. Jack L. Kerbel, in a strapless gown of lilac-shaded tulle over taffeta, with shirred bodice, clusters of lilacs on the bouffant skirt, and matching stole; and Miss Myrtle Kerbel, in a strapless mauve tulle gown, having a shirred bodice, and tiered, ruffled skirt over taffeta, with matching stole. They had fresh flower wreaths in their hair, matching their small cascades of pink roses, blue irises, and lavender sweet peas. Jack L. Kerbel, the groom's brother, was best man. Ushers were: Henry Saperia, Irving Green, Gordon Kerbel, Ted. Forman, Carl A. Stone, Dr. Abby Elsen, Dr. A. Bernstein, and Dr. G. S. Anker. The altar was banked with standards of chrysanthemums, gladioli, dogwood, and cedar branches, and white candelabra. The bride's mother wore a flesh-coloured chiffon gown, styled with deep V-neckline that had a Queen Anne collar of matching Chantilly lace, long sleeves, and accordion-pleated skirt, with pink flowered cap. She carried a hand bouquet of pink roses and pale blue irises. The groom's mother was in a rose-beige-coloured lace gown, styled on princess lines, with shawl collar, long sleeves, and flared skirt over taffeta. She had an off-the-face brim in matching lace, trimmed with a spray of lilies-of-the-valley, and a wristlet of tinted pale green gardenias. For the trip to Chicago, Ill., and Virginia Beach, Va., the bride left in a white linen suit dress, pale lime-green straw bonnet, matching accessories, and a mauve orchid corsage. Out-of-town wedding guests were: Mrs. K. Gerber, Mrs. S. Perlman, Mr. and Mrs. A. Green, Mr. and Mrs. George Carr, of Detroit, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. B. Green, Mr. and Mrs. L. Florence and family, Mrs. H. Florence, of Peterborough; Mr. and Mrs. H. Wise, of Paris; Mr. and Mrs. L. Cohen, of Sarnia; and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Goldstein and family, of Ingersoll.

Seminary Gets Prague Bible, 1518

The celebrated Prague Bible, published in 1518 by the noted Hebrew printer, Gershom Kohen, has been acquired by the Library of The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York. The rare Bible, generally recognized as the first major Hebrew work printed in Prague, contains the five Books of the Pentateuch. The first page of each of the Books is enhanced by intricate woodcuts, a fact of special interest to experts who point out that illustrated books of sixteenth century Bohemia are extremely scarce. Only one other copy of the Prague Bible is known to exist today, owned by the Bodleian Library of Oxford University.

The volume contains within its covers a detailed description of the various financial and other tribulations which beset Gershom Kohen and his associates while the Bible was being printed. Work was begun in June, 1514, and was not completed until January, 1518. The craftsman, known as the first and greatest Hebrew printer of Prague, appended a poem thanking God for the privilege of having been able to print the first Hebrew Bible in Bohemia. This volume has since become recognized as the masterwork of the Kohen printing house.

The circumstances surrounding the Seminary's acquisition of the Prague Bible stretch back fifty years. In the spring of 1901, Dr. Alexander Marx, director of libraries at the Seminary, who was then a young student at the University of Koenigsberg, Germany, visited that city's public library and came away deeply impressed by the copy of the Prague Pentateuch. In May of this year, as Dr. Marx was leafing through a catalog of an auction sale to be held in Amsterdam, he was immediately struck by the reference to the "Pentateuch and Haftoroth with Rashi's Commentary printed by Gershom Kohen." Dr. Marx communicated with Louis H. Silver, Chicago attorney and connoisseur of rare books. Mr. Silver undertook to bid for the Library, and shortly thereafter, the historic volume became the property of the Seminary.

The Library, which houses the greatest collection of rare Hebrew books and manuscripts in the world, already owns the only known copy of another product of the Kohen printing house, a Prayer Book, published in 1522.

SAMMY'S RECEPTION

BY JACK L. CONRAD

Around the walls of the shoddy little dance-hall large gilt-framed mirrors reflect the gay dresses, white shirts and smiling guests, the young men wisecracking, the girls giggling and sniggering over their glasses of port or cherry brandy. Waitresses flit about carrying trays laden with coffee and cakes to those guests who have seated themselves at the small flower-decked tables ranged round the sides of the hall. Music mingles with the chink of crockery, and the children, who have been sporting about on the highly polished floor, turn as with one accord and scamper towards a small platform situated at one end of the hall. The musicians have arrived. A four-piece band are setting up their stands and tuning their instruments.

Sammy and Rita, returning from the photographer's, snatch some coffee and take up positions near the door to welcome their later guests. A hired Master of Ceremonies, resplendent in a red swallow-tailed coat and white tie, announces them as they enter. Handshaking, smiles, congratulations, a toast at the bar with Sammy occasionally slipping an envelope into his pocket—money presents, and very acceptable, too.

Grandfather Ezra joins the young couple. His eyes are sparkling, and his rubicund, grey-bearded face beaming.

Rita smiles shyly. "I'm feeling a little tired. All this excitement. I do wish it was over, grandad."

"Well, my little doves, happy?"

He pinches her cheek affectionately. "How can you say such a thing! This is a great day, my dear. The greatest day in your life and you wish it was over! Ai, ai!" He strokes his beard, and a soft, faraway look creeps into his eyes. "At my wedding we celebrated for three days. All the village celebrated." He sighs softly. "Sixty years ago. A dream, yes, just like a dream. I was a lad of sixteen, and your grandmother, may her soul rest in peace, fifteen. Sixty years ago," and he continues to stroke his beard meditatively.

A beaming Mrs. Berg, bubbling with excitement, bustles over to them. I really don't know where I am," she gushes breathlessly. "A word with this one, and a word with that one, and everyone so happy and satisfied and so full of praise for you both. Oh, I am so happy."

"Mr. and Mrs. Singer!" announces the M.C. Sammy turns quickly and hurries towards the new arrivals. Mr. Singer is his employer, a short, paunchy, bald-headed man, in sharp contrast to his wife, a tall, thin, angularly built woman.

"We did so hope that you would come earlier," gushes Mrs. Berg. "It was such a lovely Synagogue ceremony."

The little man dabs his bald head with a handkerchief. "Had to stay late in the workshop to get work ready for the morning. When you're a guv'nor the workshop's your master." Sammy's father joins them. Mr. Singer becomes more profuse in his apologies. "—you know, Mr. Berg, I don't like slack weeks, ain't that right, Sammy?"

The Singers are conducted to the refreshment bar. Mr. Berg throws a meaning glance at the attendant and well-filled glasses are placed before them. Mrs. Singer swallows half her glass and kisses Rita on the cheek, she then swallows the remainder and kisses her on the other cheek. Her husband, a second well-filled glass in his hand, appraises the girl with an embarrassing scrutiny, winks at Sammy and slips an envelope into his hand. "He'yar, my boy, something towards your future, and may you both be very happy."

A prolonged roll on the drums and the M.C. announces that dinner is about to be served. The ballroom empties rapidly, but Sammy and Rita stay behind. They are to make a ceremonial entry when the guests are seated.

The M.C. offers them a few final instructions. "Now, young lady, have you got your bouquet, and you, sir, your silk hat?" They nod nervously. "Now," continues that worthy, "when I give you the signal you will make your entry. Walk slowly round the tables before taking your places at the head table and give the crowd a chance to cheer and make a noise. They like that."

Sammy fidgets with his spectacles, Rita grips her bouquet tightly. Red swallow-tails hurries to the dining hall entrance, looks in, then turns and beckons to the young couple. The lights are extinguished and a spotlight is focussed upon them. The band breaks into Mendelssohn's march. The guests rise in their seats, cheer, clap and drum on their plates with cutlery. Sammy and Rita pause momentarily, embarrassed and not a little overwhelmed by the ovation, then slowly make their way round the tables. A prince and a princess betrothed, moving through the regal banqueting halls of a sumptuous palace. One brief day in their humdrum lives invested with a fairy tale splendour.

A stifling heat blankets the dining hall. Starched collars are limp and crumpled and white ties awry. Conversation drifts lazily in the air and the clatter of plates and cutlery mingles jarringly with the noisy little dance band.

At a table, a wizened little man is watching with some concern a stout, florid-faced woman at his side. She has tackled every course so far and even on occasions has asked for a second helping.

"Rifka, take care," says the little man. "Remember what the doctor said about your indigestion."

"Huh!" snorts the woman, jaws working vigorously. "Doctors can go and bury themselves. I'd look very well if I followed their advice. I'd be pushing up daisies now and you'd probably be looking for a second wife." She busies herself with knife and fork. "Anyway, Chaim, don't you worry. I've brought plenty of pills with me."

Speeches and toasts mark the close of dinner. Sammy, in a barely audible voice, thanks the guests for their attendance. One replies —a long-winded, nautical speech about the safe harbours of matrimony in the vast, turbulent seas of life. Some of the guests begin to nod drowsily, overcome by the heat and the heavy meal. The speaker finally comes to anchor. Applause greets his return from the far seas and he sits down, delighted with the ovation, blissfully unaware that the cheers are for his finally coming to rest.

Reverend Green, the minister engaged for the occasion, conducts the 'Grace After Meals' service. He is young, recently appointed, and therefore somewhat nervous at first, but his voice grows with confidence, and is soon ringing through the hall with the voices of the assembly as a choral background.

The service over, the guests begin drifting back to the ballroom. The musicians set up their stands, and the M.C. with a wave of his hand and a stentorian 'Ladies and Gentlemen!' invokes a silence. The bridal couple are to open the ball. The guests form a large circle. Sammy and Rita take the centre of the floor. The lights are lowered and they are pinpointed by a brilliant spotlight. A muted violin wails and to an outburst of clapping the young couple begin to gyrate slowly round the hall. Twice they circle the floor alone, the spotlight glued to their revolving figures; then, at a signal from the Master of Ceremonies, the guests join in the dancing.

Grandad Ezra is talking to the young couple whilst having a cooling drink at the bar.

"Sensible people can always be happy," the old man is saying. "For what is happiness after all? Just having what you want, and wanting what you have."

Mr. Singer, standing nearby, his wife in close attendance, joins in, teetering backwards and forwards on his heels, a half-filled glass in his hand. "Neh! fiddlesticks!" he exclaims. "My dear friends, for a marriage to be successful, a wife should be blind, and a husband deaf." He gulps down the remainder of his glass. "A wife should be like a star. Appear at night and vanish with the dawn."

"Shmiel, you're drunk!" snaps his wife. "You're talking too much. You need some fresh air," and taking him by the arm, she steers him towards an open door. The band crashes into a rousing Russian folk dance and, with much stamping and clapping of hands the guests take the floor, form circles and begin whirling rapidly. A dark-haired, vivacious young woman and a tousled haired young man jump into the centre of one ring and fling themselves into a blood-tingling Cossack dance. Sweat pours from their faces. The music grows wilder. The couple jump and jerk like frenzied marionettes, flinging their arms and legs about in wild, energetic abandon. When the dance finally ends amid a furore of applause an exquisitely dressed young girl turns to her companion, a long-shouldered, slim-hipped young man, and murmurs, "Thank heaven that's over. I hope they play a tango or rumba next. Those foreign dances are a nuisance."

It is almost midnight, and a subdued atmosphere pervades the tawdry little dance-hall. The heat of the long summer evening has eventually taken its toll on the merrymaking and dancing. The guests sit or loll at the small tables fanning themselves and sipping lemonade. Even the band has lost some of its noisy vigour, the intervals between the dances growing longer and longer. Taxi drivers lounge near the door. It is late and some of the guests will probably want cabs to take them home.

The youthful minister takes leave of his hosts. "I wish you happiness and good fortune in the years ahead," he says, shaking hands with the young couple, and —with a quiet smile—"to remember that your future, our future, for better or worse, lies in your hands. In time you will probably be blessed with children. The torch of Israel handed on. Then, more than ever, will you have to bear in mind your responsibilities for our place in the world . . . the knowledge that we are all accountable for each other . . . that we are constantly under the glare of a fierce light, a light we cannot escape, even if we choose to ignore it, for ethically or religiously we can be and do nothing lightheartedly."

The last guest has left. Rita, her tiara and veil removed, is sitting between her mother and mother-in-law listening disinterestedly to their conversation. She is tired, very tired. She longs to remove her shoes and lie down comfortably in some soft cool place. Waiters in their shirt-sleeves are clearing the tables and tidying up. One of them fetches her a bulky parcel. "Here you are, Mrs. Berg, some sandwiches and fruit for tomorrow's breakfast."

"The car's waiting for you," says his father, "You and Rita had better slip away now. I shall settle everything."

The two mothers start crying. The girl's parents kiss her affectionately, then wring Sammy's hand warmly. Last words of parting, then the young man grabs the bulky food parcel with one hand, his wife with the other, and hurries out. The driver slams the door and the young couple, alone for the first time during that eventful day, lean back wearily against the cushioned upholstery. Sammy passes his arm across her shoulder, and she nestles snugly up to him. Both close their eyes and are silent as the taxi speeds through the sultry night, through dark, dingy streets into the drab dockside area, eventually coming to a halt outside a small mean-looking house near a railway arch. The young couple are asleep when the driver opens the door. He coughs and Sammy stirs. The cabby grins. "Here you are, my duckies," he chuckles. "You're home." Rita opens her eyes, looks at her husband for a moment, then smiles at him sleepily.

"We're home now, darling, we're home," whispers her husband. The girl rises to her feet, and the parcel of food that has been resting upon her lap slips to the floor. The driver picks it up and holds it while they dismount. A train rattles by overhead. Sammy fumbles in his pocket for the latchkey, then slowly opens the door. With two cups finely diced cantaloupe

CLASS IN COOKERY

two oranges, seeded two cups diced peeled peaches one lemon, seeded three cups sugar

Cook cantaloupe and peaches in a covered saucepan for two minutes. Have ready oranges and lemon which have been put through food chopper, and add to the hot mixture. Stir in sugar and cook over moderate heat until mixture thickens. Stir frequently to prevent scorching. Fill glasses. Cover with paraffin. This yields approximately four cups. Variation: to the above, add twelve maraschino cherries and juice, and proceed as in basic recipe. The cherries may be sliced thin, if desired.

Mrs. I. Weiss,
39 Braemar Avenue, Toronto.

SOUR CREAM TWISTS

four cups flour
one teaspoon salt
one cup shortening
one-quarter cup lukewarm water one envelope dry yeast
one egg plus two egg-yolks
one cup thick sour cream
one teaspoon vanilla
three-quarters cup sugar

Prepare yeast by dissolving in water and a little sugar, according to directions on package. Sift flour with salt. Cut in shortening as for pie crust. Beat eggs together, combined with sour cream and vanilla, and yeast mixture, and mix thoroughly. Cover, and let rise in refrigerator for two hours. Roll out dough on a cloth, which has been sprinkled lightly with sugar. Sprinkle sugar on dough, before rolling it out to a square about ten by twelve inches, folding dough into the centre from the sides. Roll out and repeat this folding and rolling, four times in all, sprinkling sugar on cloth and on dough each time, to prevent it from sticking. Cut into strips about three quarters of an inch wide and four inches long. Sprinkle with sugar. Place two strips together, and twist four times in all. Place on ungreased cookie sheet several inches apart. Let rise until double in size, and bake until brown, for at least twenty minutes, in a 375-degree oven. This yields three or four dozen twists.

Mrs. M. Levitt,
3636 Decarie Boulevard, Montreal.

Council Of Jewish Women Backs Teacher Training

To meet greatly increased needs of its school system Israel has embarked on a major four-point program of expansion of teacher training. According to word received at the National Office in New York of the National Council of Jewish Women, it is being undertaken by the School of Education of Hebrew University in Jerusalem, the Teacher Training Colleges, the Teachers' Association of Israel, and the Ministry of Education of the Israeli Government. The National Council of Jewish Women supports the School of Education.

The School of Education, the only institution training secondary school teachers, will now expand its curriculum to include courses for one hundred specially selected teachers in the elementary schools.

University courses will also be given to graduates of the Israeli Teacher Training Colleges so as to raise their standards and enable them to teach in post-elementary classes consisting of pupils up to the age of 16. At the same time, the School of Education of Hebrew University is undertaking, jointly with the Ministry of Education, to open courses for training of nursery and kindergarten supervisors and principals. For this purpose, the Beth Hayeled Pre-School Institute in Jerusalem, supported by the National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, will be used as a workshop for practice teaching.

These new courses are in addition to the recently announced training course for school principals which opened on July 15, and which will be repeated each summer. At the request of the Ministry of Education, the School of Education of Hebrew University is also considering the addition of courses for teachers in vocational training, an item which is not now included in the curriculum of any teacher-training institution in the country. "The need for teachers in Israel," according to a report received by the National Council of Jewish Women from Dr. Eliezer Rieger, head of the School of Education, "paralleling the rapid increase in population, has grown beyond the capacity of our present staff and facilities. We are expanding to meet this need as rapidly as we can without sacrificing our present high standards. It is an enormous task, and one which will affect, in no small way, the whole future of the new nation."

Dr. Joachim Prinz, member of the Executive of the World Jewish Congress, is on a two-month mission to Latin America for the World Jewish Congress. He is the leader of Temple B'nai Abraham in Newark, N. J., and vice-president of the American Jewish Congress. He will visit Brazil, Chile, and Uruguay, and report to Jewish communities there on the work of the WJCongress at the United Nations, in the field of human rights and in other areas. Dr. Prinz will also confer with government and Jewish leaders and make a study of the Jewish situation in these South American countries. As a Rabbi in Berlin, he was noted for his fearless attacks from the pulpit upon the Nazi regime. Frequently arrested by the Gestapo, he was finally expelled in 1937 and accepted an invitation from the late Dr. Stephen S. Wise to make his home in America.

Racial discrimination in Brazil is now a penal offence, reports the London "Times". Under the new law, a refusal by hotels, restaurants and schools to admit coloured people is punishable by imprisonment or fine. The new policy is to encourage the immigration of all races and that selection will be made solely with a view to the country's needs.

IN MEMORIAM

Kahlenberg: In ever loving memory of a devoted husband, father, and grandfather, David Kahlenberg, who passed away suddenly on August 14, 1950.

Time may heal the broken-hearted,
Years may make the wound less sore;
But they cannot fill the longing,
For the loved one gone before.
Who shall say the grief is lessened
Though the smiles may hide the tears?
Memories keep the wound still open
Despite the passing of the years.

Still sadly missed by his loving wife, Susie; children, Yetta, Bennie, Sam., Margie; and grandchildren, Sally, Arthur, and Morrie.

EXPERT

book, "The Accuracy of the Bible," published in the United States in 1935.

This work deals with the probability of the Five Books of Moses and he set out to establish whether the stories of Moses and Joseph were credible or not. After many years' investigation, which carried him throughout the Middle East and made him a master of its history and languages as well as ancient tracts in hieroglyphics, he concluded that the stories were authentic.

Dr. Yahuda examined details of the stories as well as evidence of their origins and affirmed that they indicate minute familiarity with the period and scene, largely Egypt. Thus the fat and lean kine of Joseph's dreams were natural Egyptian dream symbols; Joseph shaved, which was an Egyptian and not a Hebrew custom, and the plagues which befell the Egyptians were entirely probable, according to his findings, says the Herald Tribune.

He deduced that the stories were not made up centuries later but "can only have been written by some one who was familiar with Egyptian conditions and in a time when such conditions were perfectly known to his readers." "We can say now," he said, "from clear evidence, that the man who wrote the Book of Joshua saw Jericho's walls collapse."

Apart from this investigation, which was also described in other scholarly works, Dr. Yahuda was an authority on Hebrew, Arabian, Egyptian, Assyrian and Babylonian cultures and on the Koran. He had lectured extensively in both the United States and Europe, and was also a leading student of the history and literature of Jews in Spain.

Four Welsh sheep dogs, shipped recently from England to Israel, are able to bark in a language that sheep understand, but shepherds have a problem in giving commands to their new helpers. The dogs have been trained to obey commands only in Welsh, so the Israeli shepherds either will have to learn the Welsh commands or teach the animals to obey the Hebrew equivalents. The former owner of the dogs sent a list of the words the dogs understand by the captain of the ship that took them to Israel. He explained, however, The London News Chronicle says, that while the dogs may be able to learn new words of command, "they will answer only to their names—Tango, Roy, Nell and Fly—which must not be changed."

MARRIAGES

ROSS-ZENER

The marriage of Harriet Pearl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Zener, Dovercourt Road, to Marvin William Ross, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Ross, Stayner Avenue, took place June 14, at half-past five o'clock, at Brai Israel Synagogue, with Rabbi Judah Washer officiating, assisted by Rabbi M. Langer. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a gown of white Chantilly lace, having a pointed neckline, outlined in silver bugle beads, also long sleeves, and a basque bodice extending to a tunic effect with scalloped edge, over a three-tiered white net underskirt. A seed-pearl-beaded and embroidered headdress held her full-length tulle illusion veil, and she carried a cascade of Calla lilies. Miss Frances Zener, the bride's sister, was maid of honour, in an American Beauty coloured gown of brocaded taffeta, with matching feather headpiece. She carried a cascade bouquet of mixed flowers. Irvin Borins was best man. The ushers were: Isadore and Dr. Bernard Zener, the bride's brothers; Irving Horowitz, and Alfred Herman. Sheldon Zener was ring-bearer. The synagogue was decorated with standards of white and red peonies. The bride's mother wore a powder-blue crepe and lace gown, with matching feather headdress, and corsage of American Beauty roses. The groom's mother was in a gown of teal-blue crepe, with matching headdress, and corsage of pink carnations. For the trip to Atlantic City, N. J., and New York, the bride left in a beige gabardine suit, natural-coloured straw hat, and rust-coloured accessories. They are living on Glen Park Avenue.

Day nurseries and day-care centres, helpful as they are to working mothers in the cities where they are available, do not solve the problem for many Canadian women left to bring up their children without a husband and without a home. There are some 15,000 deserted mothers in Canada today, and many times that number of widows with dependent children, points out Margaret Austin in Health magazine. Day care falls short because of the difficulty of taking the child to and from the centres in rush hour traffic and in all kinds of weather. Most day-care centres have no facilities for looking after children who may be ill.

Toronto Meetings

● HADASSAH: Negev Chapter dinner and presentation, honouring Miss Della Sternberg, daughter of Mrs. H. Sternberg, Palmerston Boulevard, prior to her marriage to Leslie Witchell, of Sudbury, had twenty guests present. An executive meeting at Centre Island, had Miss Doris Soboloff, president, presiding.

● Ernest Hobbs, 10 Midland Avenue, member of the East York Camera Club, who won first prize in the amateur photocontest sponsored by the Bnai Brith Carnival held in the spring at Mutual Arena, will receive an award of $50 from the Bnai Brith Carnival committee. Second prize-winner was W. J. Blackhall, 34 Woodland Park Road, who will receive luggage; and third was John Wickson, 166 Roxborough Street East, who will be awarded a ring.

IN MEMORIAM

ISRAELSON: In loving memory of our grandson, Gary Hersch Israelson, who passed away 24 days in Ab (August 29, 1948).

Till memory fades and life departs,
You live forever in our hearts.

Sadly missed by grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Forcht.

ISRAELSON: In loving memory of our dear daughter, and sister, Pearl Israelson, who passed away 24 days in Ab (August 29, 1948).

Just when her life was brightest,
In pride of womanhood days,
The life she planned was ended,
By life's mysterious ways.
Each time we look at her picture,
So young, so fair, so true,
It's no wonder our hearts are aching,
And longing, dear Pearl, for you.
When all is still and silent,
And sleep forsakes our eyes,
Our thoughts are in the silent grave,
Where our dear daughter and sister lies.

Sadly missed by mother and father; sister, Molly; and brothers, Sid. and Cecil.

Cards Of Thanks

J. Sugar and family wish to extend their sincere thanks and appreciation to their many relatives and friends in Toronto, and in other cities, for the kindness extended to them during their recent sad bereavement in the loss of a beloved wife and loving mother.

The family of the late Anna Goldie Breslin wish to thank their many relatives and friends for their kind expressions of sympathy and memorial tokens, especially Rabbi Reuben Slonim for his consoling words and friendship during their recent bereavement in the loss of a loving wife and mother.

DEATHS

Mrs. Esther Donnenfield, 205 Glen Road, died on August 13, at the age of sixty-five. She is survived by her husband, Joseph Donnenfield, 205 Glen Road; three children, Morris Goodman, of Los Angeles, Cal.; Joseph Goodman, of Detroit, Mich.; and Gilda, of New York. She was a member of Adath Israel Synagogue, of which her husband, Joseph Donnenfield was ex-president; and of Central Chapter of Hadassah. Rabbi E. Schild officiated at funeral services. Interment was in Roselawn Cemetery. Shiva at 205 Glen Road.

Mrs. Teresa Wolfe Rashkis, 4 Castleview Avenue, died on August 12, at Mount Sinai Hospital, at the age of sixty-three. Born in New York, Mrs. Rashkis spent her girlhood in Toronto and Ottawa. While in her teens, she won a scholarship to the Metropolitan Opera and returned to New York, where she sang with the company. She was a soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra; and a soloist in the first performance of Bloch's Symphony Israel, at Carnegie Hall in the early 1930's. She returned to Toronto, and gave numerous recitals here since, including concerts to aid the Red Cross during the Second World War. She was an active member of the Women's Musical Club and the Rehearsal Club, and attended Holy Blossom Temple. Mrs. Rashkis is survived by her husband, Morris Rashkis; three sons, Morton, Old Park Road; Melvin, of Cleveland, Ohio; Jay William, of New York; eight sisters, Mrs. M. Margosches, of Ottawa; Mrs. J. B. Danson and Mrs. H. Stein, of Toronto; Mrs. N. Baum, Mrs. R. Englander, and Mrs. Phoebe Pullan, of New Rochelle, N. Y.; Miss Violet Wolfe, of New York; Mrs. H. Harris, of Charlotte, North Carolina; a brother, J. Wolfe, of Montreal, Que.; and four grandchildren. Rabbi Reuben Slonim conducted funeral services.

Mrs. Miriam S. Levy died suddenly at her home, 370 Palmerston Boulevard, on July 27. Mrs. Levy was one of the first members of the Ladies Aid Society, organized in 1910 for the relief of the needy; assisted in the organization of the Hebrew Weston Sanitarium; was a pioneer member of the Mizrachi and active in it since its inception; a member of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Mount Sinai Hospital; of the Central Chapter of Hadassah since its formation; one of the earliest members of the Hebrew Maternity Aid Society; and, until recently, active in the Talmud Torah; was one of the founders of the Toronto Jewish Old Folks Home, and worked toward the new Home, which is now being built, and was a member of the board of directors, for several decades being its honourary treasurer; and was a member of the Hebrew Men of England Congregation. She was noted for her sound judgment and keen wit. She is survived by: her husband, Rabbi M. H. Levy; her sons, Jules and Nat., of New York; daughters, Mrs. Louis Goldfine (Ida); Mrs. H. B. Miller (Sarah); and Mrs. Harry Shiller (Anne), all of Montreal, Quebec; Mrs. Morris J. Weiss (Lottie); and Mrs. Louis James (Belle), both of Toronto; her grandchildren, Mrs. Samuel Cass (Annabel Goldfine); Mrs. Benjamin Louis (Anabel Miller), Alvyn Shiller, and Miss Joyce Shiller, all of Montreal; Rabbi Marvin Goldfine, Mrs. Lester Cooper (Audrey Levy); Jimmy Levy, Mrs. George Pager (Enid Levy); and Miss Phyllis Levy, all of New York; Mrs. Jack Gottheil (Hadassah Goldfine), of Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. Harry Weiner (Shirley Arlene Weiss), Misses Barbara and June Weiss, and Philip James, all of Toronto; and four great-grandchildren.

a smile the driver hands him the parcel of food, pockets his fare, and drives away.

Arms interlocked, the young couple enter the house. In the distance, the silence of the night is suddenly shattered by the caterwauling of cats fighting over the possession of a rich garbage dump. But the boy and girl hear nothing. They smile at each other in the darkness, ethereal happiness and tender devotion mirrored in their eyes. Two alone in a beautiful world of their own.

Like one shadow they melt into the darkness of the shabby little house. The door shuts gently, and the enveloping softness of the night closes over them.

What Is The Future Of The Zionist Movement?

BY WILLIAM ZUKERMAN, OF NEW YORK, EDITOR OF JEWISH NEWSLETTER

The following appeared as a letter to the New York Herald Tribune:

The twenty-third World Zionist Congress which opened in Jerusalem is one of the most crucial and at the same time most unusual gatherings in the history of the Jewish, or of any other, people. Nothing more unique and more dramatic than the dilemma that is facing the gathering has ever confronted a people before.

Exactly fifty-four years ago, in August, 1897, a small group of Jewish idealists and dreamers, headed by Dr. Theodore Herzl and Dr. Max Nordau, assembled at Basel, Switzerland, and proclaimed a novel, and at that time an almost fantastic, theory, that the Jewish people who had been dispersed all over the world for nearly two thousand years and had no political homeland of their own, were to establish a state of their own in the ancient homeland in Palestine and were to become a political nation like others. An international world organization called the World Zionist Organization was formed and the Congress at Basel became its first official executive organ.

After fifty years of almost incredible hardships, strong opposition within and outside Jewry, and great historic tragedies which have befallen the Jewish people, that fantastic dream has become a reality. The Zionist movement has met with one of the greatest successes in history. Israel was established as a state; it is recognized and approved by the entire civilized world and seems to be as real as any modern state which has arisen during the last fifty years. The wildest dreams of the Zionist dreamers have become a reality.

But it was this very success, so rare in history, that has presented the Zionist movement with a problem that is rarer and tougher than that of any defeat. The problem is: now, that the Zionist movement has accomplished so successfully its aim and program promulgated fifty-four years ago, what is left for it to do? Should it continue its existence as before? Or should it curtail, and even liquidate, its previous world-wide activity and withdraw from the scene? This is the fundamental question before the Congress in Jerusalem now.

Generally, there are two answers given to this question. One is that the Zionist movement has completed its task with the establishment of Israel and has no justification for further existence, at least in its present form. It has either to liquidate its organization and activities or to reorganize on an entirely new basis as a Society of Friends of Israel whose chief aim and purpose is to help the new state become economically and politically strong, to provide it with necessary funds in form of relief and grants-in-aid, and assist it in its growth and development.

Such a society does not necessarily have to be limited to Zionists and nationalist Jews only. Many non-Zionists and even anti-nationalists can consistently co-operate in a large philanthropic effort to establish an economically sound and politically democratic state for those Jews who, for one reason or another, are homeless or are obliged to leave their present home in search of a new one.

The second view is that Zionism has not completed its task with the establishment of Israel. The founders of Zionism who assembled in Basel fifty-four years ago made it very clear in their program that Zionism had come not merely to establish a state for the Jews but to solve the Jewish problem all over the world. Its aim is to "redeem" all Jews the world over from their "exile" and dispersion and settle them in Israel. The establishment of the state is thus not the end but the beginning of the Zionist task.

A larger and more ambitious program lies ahead of the Zionist movement now—to "in-gather" all the Jews wherever they live and no matter under what conditions, and bring them all to Israel. To accomplish this program the Zionist movement has now a tremendous task of nationalizing the Jews all over the world, educating and preparing them for settlement in Israel.

With this in view the World Zionist Organization must become a full-fledged and equal partner with Israel in the task of "redemption". The Jewish world, according to this view, is to be divided into two parts: Israel is to have jurisdiction over its own citizens, while the Zionist movement is to have charge of the Jewish "hinterland" in the Diaspora by virtue of a special "charter" which will give it priority in fund collecting, education and preparation of all Jews for the final exodus to Israel.

Strange as it may seem, the American Zionists who, almost as a body reject the nationalistic theory that Israel is the potential home of all Jews and refuse to be "in-gathered" from their native America to the new state, are now the chief supporters of the second, strongly nationalistic view of present-day Zionism. And the Israelis, who are the most rabid nationalists within their own country, advocate the less nationalistic, philanthropic and humanitarian view of the future of the Zionist movement.

While they do not go to such length as to propose the immediate liquidation of the Zionist Organization of America, they are certainly cool to its ultra-nationalistic ambitions. They gravitate more toward the non-Zionist Jews of America for every kind of aid for Israel, and they are definitely opposed to any monopoly concessions to the Zionists outside Israel.

The reasons for this strange change of roles are not difficult to find. The present leaders of Israel are primarily realists apart from being nationalists. They know that the immediate task ahead of them now is to consolidate their gains and establish their state on a firm and permanent basis. This, they also know, cannot be accomplished by the American Zionists alone. They therefore favor an appeal to the larger non-Zionist section of American Jews.

Apart from that, the Israelis, like most patriots of new states, are jealous of their sovereignty and they want no interference in their internal affairs and no partners in their foreign program. With the newly gained self-confidence of success, they believe that they can do things better by themselves than in partnership with the American Zionists. They argue, not without some logic, that if the American Zionists are sincere in their nationalistic aspirations to bring all Jews to Israel, let them start by settling in the new state themselves and help to build it from within. One cannot have a grandstand seat and at the same time play the game, be an Israeli nationalist and live in comfort in the United States.

This is the chief issue at the World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem now and the background of the struggle between the Israelis and the Zionists outside Israel. It is a struggle mostly for power, prestige and leadership within the Jewish world, although it is disguised as an ideological struggle. The fight is bitter and strong as only fights between members of one family can be. Upon its outcome will depend the fate not only of American Zionism but also the character of the entire Jewish social and relief work in the United States for years to come.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.
